The crisis now includes the closure of the Vancouver Convention Centre, which has become a drug den and host to an unlicensed pot sale, a source told CTV Vancouver's Central B. C. Bureau Chief Rick Cluff. The source said the convention centre has been occupied by unlicensed sellers and an "ongoing house party" for several months now. The site's owner, Urban Development, "can't crack down," said Cluff, and because of that, the city has to close the venue. The source said there were upwards of 10 dispensaries operating openly in Vancouver's downtown core. According to an analysis conducted by the city's deputy mayor, Judy Graves, there were about 500 drug-related complaints made to police last year. Another public safety meeting was held Wednesday night for citizens who want to shut down all unlicensed dispensaries and close them down. Graves said she was very satisfied with the response, adding that all the city's information and advice regarding illegal drug sales in the downtown core, be it pot or alcohol, was sent to
