Did you know that the U.S. has more inmates than any other country? It also has the highest incarceration rate in the world. What are some of the causes of this epidemic? What are some possible solutions to help fix it? This blog post will explore these questions, providing readers with plenty of information on America's prison system and what can be done to put it back on track. Over the next few months, this blog will explore these topics and more, including: The causes of America's prison problem A local view of the prison system in America Possible solutions to fix America's prison problem. Former Justice Department official and criminal justice expert Jess Bravin makes a strong case for abolishing US prisons: "I've long argued for much smaller penal systems—one that keeps the human beings behind bars to a minimum and lets those who need it get help with their drug or alcohol addiction, or with mental illness. Prisons, to me, are a slow-motion death. In the end, you're not going to put all these people away. The question is what do we want to do with them? How much money are we going to spend on them?"
